

Reflection Questions

- How do you draw inspiration and hope from scripture, recovery literature, and spiritual reading?
- What do you do to maintain a fresh memory of the consequences of active addiction and attachment?
- How are you transparent with others about your experience, strength, and hope (good and bad)?

26th Sunday in Ordinary Time

The author of the Letter to the Hebrews (4:12) writes, "The word of God is living and effective, sharper than any two-edged sword, penetrating even between soul and spirit, joints and marrow, and able to discern reflections and thoughts of the heart." This is especially true for those of us actively pursuing recovery from addiction and unhealthy attachments, one day at a time. As we move through the liturgical calendar, we find certain passages penetrating our soul in particularly effective ways.

This Sunday's First Reading begins with a valuable warning: "Woe to the complacent in Zion!" While freedom from the isolating and dark effects of addiction and compulsions may bring about new comforts and privileges, we must be sure that these do not keep us from continuing to live a lifestyle rooted in service and recovery.

Many, if not most of us, have experienced some sort of rock bottom. Having been offered a second chance through recovery and a spiritual way of life, we swear that we will never forget where we've been and have no intention of going back. However, our condition is cunning, baffling, powerful, and patient. Some say that we have a built-in forgetter, which makes it challenging to recall the damage caused by untreated addiction and attachments, especially as life becomes more comfortable.

Good intentions do not guarantee long-term positive action. Therefore, we make a daily commitment to practice the principles of the 12 steps in all our affairs. In this week's Second Reading, Saint Paul urges us to, "Pursue righteousness, devotion, faith, love, patience, and gentleness." Working with others that are new to recovery keeps our memory fresh, fosters gratitude, and maintains devotion to our own recovery as we share what we have freely received.

If we find ourselves in pursuit of comfort and the opportunity to take it easy, it is wise to do so with priority given to our spiritual life. We pray to be reasonably happy in this life and supremely happy with Him forever in the next. A tale of two deaths are described by Jesus in this week's Gospel Reading:

*There was a rich man who dressed in purple garments and fine linen and dined sumptuously each day.
And lying at his door was a poor man named Lazarus, covered with sores, who would gladly have eaten his fill of the scraps that fell from the rich man's table.
Dogs even used to come and lick his sores.*

The fate of the Rich Man and Lazarus are not surprising as we consider the mind and heart of Christ. As his mother declared to Elizabeth upon her visitation, "The hungry he has filled with good things; the rich he has sent away empty" (Luke 1:53). Jesus continues the story:

*When the poor man died,
he was carried away by angels to the bosom of Abraham.
The rich man also died and was buried,
and from the netherworld, where he was in torment,
he raised his eyes and saw Abraham far off

As expected, the Rich Man pleads for mercy and another chance. At the very least, he would like Lazarus to return to the house of his family to warn those who are still alive. "If they will not listen to Moses and the prophets, neither will they be persuaded if someone should rise from the dead," Abraham replies.

Having had a spiritual awakening, our mission is to provide an account of the horrors of our past so that others may benefit from our experience. If we are not yet in a place to share the good news, we can begin with transparency and a willingness to encounter our Lord, who makes all things new.
