4th Sunday of Easter

We come together each week united in the saving hope of Jesus Christ, our Shepherd. In his name, we have been saved and offered a new way of life. Family addiction recovery provides a tangible way to measure what our lives were like before surrendering to Christ, what happened, and what our lives are like now. Sharing this good news has been the foundation of twelve step programs for nearly a century and has been a primary source of healing what used to be considered a hopeless condition—the family disease of addiction.

“The stone rejected by the builders has become the cornerstone,” is heard throughout the liturgy as we celebrate the Fourth Sunday of Easter this week. What used to be driving our demise—the illusion of control, assuming other people’s responsibilities, and a dull sense of hopelessness—has been resurrected as our source of faith in the Shepherd who lays down his life for us.

The Good Shepherd knows the voices of his sheep. He knows them individually in their distinctiveness and uniqueness, and he can pick us out of a crowd. He hears our prayers and calls out to us in a way that we take notice. Jesus Christ is not just a moral standard for conducting ourselves, but is our Lord who knows us intimately. We call out to God and He hears our cry, knowing our specific pains and desires before we can even acknowledge them ourselves.

We hear from the tenth chapter of John's Gospel this week:

Jesus said:

"I am the good shepherd.

A good shepherd lays down his life for the sheep.

A hired man, who is not a shepherd

and whose sheep are not his own,

sees a wolf coming and leaves the sheep and runs away,

and the wolf catches and scatters them.

This is because he works for pay and has no concern for the sheep.

I am the good shepherd,

and I know mine and mine know me,

just as the Father knows me and I know the Father;

and I will lay down my life for the sheep.

Christ, our Shepherd, heals and gives us the authority to heal each other. In the same way modern recovery groups grew from one person helping another, the first century Church was comprised of those who witnessed the healing power of Jesus Christ and were willing to spread it to all corners of the world. In our resurrected form, we are called to do the same while remaining obedient to the word of our Shepherd.

Let us not forget the source of our hope. We can offer gratitude for the efforts of those who established modern recovery and for the courageous faith of the first disciples of Jesus. We walk with those disciples throughout the season of Easter as we include the Acts of the Apostles in our daily and Sunday mass readings. This week we hear:

Peter, filled with the Holy Spirit, said:

"Leaders of the people and elders:

If we are being examined today

about a good deed done to a cripple,

namely, by what means he was saved,

then all of you and all the people of Israel should know that it was in the name of Jesus Christ

the Nazorean whom you crucified,

whom God raised from the dead;

in his name this man stands before you healed. He is the stone rejected by you, the builders, which has become the cornerstone.

There is no salvation through anyone else,

nor is there any other name under heaven

given to the human race by which we are to be saved."
