

Second Sunday of Advent

A voice of one crying out in the desert:

“Prepare the way of the Lord,

make straight his paths.

Every valley shall be filled and every mountain and hill shall be made low.

The winding roads shall be made straight,

and the rough ways made smooth,

and all flesh shall see the salvation of God.”

These prophetic words from the Book of Isaiah are often used in reference to John the Baptist and are quoted in this Sunday’s Gospel Reading for the Second Sunday of Advent. As we continue throughout a new liturgical year, we will primarily be hearing from the Gospel of Matthew, which describes Jesus Christ as the hopeful fulfillment of what God promised the Israelites. Jesus makes the good news available to all, including the outcasted, the lost, the addicted, and those powerless over another.

The next two weeks are meant to prepare a path for the Lord to enter our lives and make all things new. As the season of Advent moves along, we will dive further into themes of hope, love, joy, and peace. These are the fruits of setting our sights on the coming of Christ.

Our preparation includes making room for God to be our guide and protector. Often that means unlearning the things that we think we know about ourselves, our condition, God, and others so that we may be open to a new experience of all these things.

Our journey may not always be smooth, and this week it is implied that Jesus will pave a new way of life for us. Those who have developed a personal relationship with Christ have witnessed this necessary realignment. Steering our lives in the direction of self-discovery and fostering an attitude of hope sets our sails toward living freely.

Admitting we are powerless over addiction and being aware of what we can and cannot control moves us toward recognizing our need for God's presence. Our lives had become unmanageable, and we needed a new set of directions to prepare for the road of recovery. We do this by getting honest with ourselves, others, and God. With humble anticipation, we come to believe that He can restore us (both as individuals and as a collective people) to communion with Him.

Reflection Questions

The second and third weeks of Advent feature John the Baptist as the fulfillment of Isaiah's prophecy. John preaches the theme of metanoia, which is the changing of one's attitude or the shifting of our life's story. In recovery, we refer to this as a spiritual awakening.

As God prepares the way, we recognize that our behaviors and attitudes—once rooted in fear, resentment, and a desire to control—have been but a symptom of our spiritual condition. Admitting our powerlessness is but a step in the process of preparing ourselves for the coming of Jesus.

Ralph Waldo Emerson noted, "There are three wants which never can be satisfied: that of the rich, who wants something more; that of the sick, who wants something different; and that of the traveler, who says anywhere but here." It is from this discontented nature of our desires that the Twelve Steps and sacraments set us free.

- How is God straightening the path, filling in valleys, and lowering mountains along your journey of recovery?
- How are you noticing themes of hope, love, joy, and peace in your life?
- What kind of attitude changes or metanoia have you experienced in recovery?

Have a Blessed Advent!

The Advent Season is a great opportunity to reflect upon the space we make for Jesus Christ. A few ways to directly confront the road blocks that get in our way of knowing loving, and serving our Lord include:

- Participating in the Sacrament of Reconciliation between now and Christmas Day
- Serving those who are less fortunate and newcomers to recovery over the upcoming weeks
- Fasting from a habit, behavior, or substance
