

Fifth Sunday in Ordinary Time

It can be hard to make sense of the suffering we go through before we find help. The suffering we experience from our addictions, compulsions, and unhealthy attachments takes a variety of shapes, and as we work to stay sober, clean, or abstinent, we see that our behavior made it quite self-induced. The Twelve Steps give us a method to work through suffering and resentments. If we work through the First Step, we see the natural consequences of our actions.

As we grow spiritually while finding freedom and sobriety from our addictions, we begin to see that we are improving in our response to life, even if the conditions around us remain. We stop attempting to manage everything around us that could be triggering. As recovery literature notes, "It never occurred to us that we needed to change ourselves to meet conditions, whatever they were" (Twelve Steps and Twelve Traditions, p. 47).

Scripture is meant to uncover truths about us, God, and the nature of our relationship. The Bible reveals these truths in an assortment of ways, and this Sunday's First Reading clearly outlines several guiding principles often cited by Jesus:

Thus says the LORD:

*Share your bread with the hungry,
shelter the oppressed and the homeless;
clothe the naked when you see them,
and do not turn your back on your own.
Then your light shall break forth like the dawn,
and your wound shall quickly be healed;
your vindication shall go before you,
and the glory of the LORD shall be your rear guard.*

In order to break free from the self-centered condition of addiction, compulsions, and unhealthy attachments, God asks that we look to be of service to others. We have a unique ability to share experience, strength, and hope with those looking for a second chance because we have been granted the same unmerited gift.

The Letter to the Hebrews notes the effectiveness of Jesus: "Because he himself was tested through what he suffered, he is able to help those who are being tested" (2:18). Like those who have helped us along the way, we have instant credibility with individuals who still suffer because we have stood in their shoes and found a way to live freely thanks to the grace of God.

How has your relationship with the past changed over the course of your recovery journey?

- m How have you found yourself improving in response to life rather than attempting to manage conditions around you?

- m How are you called to be of service to others in recovery or in need of recovery?
